

Using An Agency

What do consultants actually DO?

What is the role of a recruitment consultant?

If you have never used an agency before or worse, had a negative experience with one, you may have no idea, or an incorrect idea, of what exactly a recruitment consultant can do for you. A recruitment consultant's roles is to facilitate the best possible match between you and a potential employer. Here's how the team at Waterford Recruitment can support your job search and help you to achieve your career goals:

Access to Opportunities

We have priority access to brand new vacancies every day. This means that you can find out about potential opportunities with the country's best companies before they are advertised. As a boutique agency, we can offer you access to the best jobs in Melbourne, Sydney and Brisbane.

Tailored Information

We work closely with businesses to gain a detailed understanding of exactly what they're looking for. This information means we can help you to tailor your resume and interview preparation to better meet their requirements.

Advocacy

Using our strong understanding of your career objectives and the needs of our business contacts, we can represent you in the best possible light and help you to stand out from the crowd.

Market Insights

As specialists in their fields, Waterford Recruitment Consultants have experience and are abreast of major trends and developments in the sectors for which they recruit. They can provide expert advice on market conditions, salary expectations and where the demand for your skills and experience is strongest.

Career Advice

To give you the best chance of securing your dream job, we coach you through all aspects of the job search process. This includes career planning, resume preparation and interview advice.

Team Approach

Waterford Recruitment Consultants all work together to find you the right job. Instead of competing against one another for commissions, our recruitment consultants are rewarded for working as a team to find you the best fit in the least time.
